This we believe to be the actual change of system which has commenced with the present year, though Mr. Kielden complained that the items of the expenditure which was sought to be reduced were not in the hands of the Committee. But the very first result of the change is the debate of Thursday night, and the ultimate result of the debate is that Mr. Otway confessed there were items in the expenditure which would bear reduction, and Mr. Lowe joined him in be reintroduced next session. Meanwhile, the the assurance that the expressions of opinion in the debate should be remembered when these estimates for next year were in preparation. Perhaps the near escape of losing $10,000 of the vote will prove no ineffectual refresher to official memories. There is not much desire on the part of the English people for any niggardly treatment of the diplomatic service. Englishmen will always desire to be well represented abroad. So long as it is the fashion for natious to fix official representatives of their Governments in one inother's capitals, the English people will desire that their representatives should stand on a level with those of other nations. If it is betrue, as Sir Hamilton Seymour stated before the erlect committee of 1850, that "given dinners is an essential part of diplomacy," Englishman will desire that the dinners given by their representatives should equal in social splendour and in diplomatic effect those given by the representatives of other nations. Nor is there any vary widespread feeling against the principle of diplomatic representation in foreign capitals. It is quite true that the chief upparent use of a Foreign Minister is to smooth the outrages perpetrated upon Chinamen in the way of wandering Britons on their ruther erratic course in foreign lands; but it is to the travelling aristocracy, the Minister is a social of the difficulty is to deny them altogether a dim shadow of the Government at home. Sir Henry Bulwer's defence of the diplomatic pro-fession, as such, however, is quite admissible. useful work is not obvious at a glance.

This limit, however, though it seems to n elegrican apply only to the extreme case quoted. that of a mun honestly believing that a change principal building is very suitable for division from one faith to another can avert everlasting damnation. If he does not believe that, but only that conversion is an immense step nearer to the ultimate end, unity of will with the Orestor, the limit, we think, must be drawn somewhat closer. He is still bound, if he believes his creed, to pro nelytiza, bound to make converts, but we do not see that he is bound, or indeed permitted, to nso any other means than persuasion; "I'le differques between the two cases is this, that in property, also, STORAGE can be and at mothe first be has time, and in the second not denite ferms. The little Mortara may die before he is baptizel, and then there is, in the eyes of an Ultramontane or exercise Calvinist no hope, but in the eyes of the Universalist, or indeed of any moderate Protestant, there is hope; nothing re lost but time; for even in the event of dorth, the Almighty, as the orthodox put it, is merciful, or, as we should put it, the probationary life does but enter upon another stage. It may be quite justifiable to ride a horse to death to save human life, when it would be must unjustifiable to do so merely to aborten ordinary pain. It clearly could not be right, for example, for such a man to press his views upon an imma-ture mind in defiance of the express and legal decision of the parent—the admission at the root of every conscience clause.
